Kooi is inspired by Chinese Shan shui painting and conveys its philosophy. Thanks to the contrast between the glass diffuser and the metal frame, lights and shadows become the protagonists of continuous visual effects and unprecedented changes of perspective. Glass and metal. Light and heavy. Black and white. The Shan shui spirit becomes a suspension lamp.

The name conjures up a woman of immense charm and character who inspired films, music and literature. It conveys a decisive, yet delicate elegance in its sinuous, unpredictable shape. The special elastic fabric, normally used in other contexts, wraps around the body of the light like a garment, creating unexpected curves.

Dimmable floor lamp. Composite body structure of multilayered steel and technopolymers, thermos extensible fabric diffuser.

AZOU MOUNTING TIPS

Azou can't work directly with high voltage, and therefore requires a driver, a dimmer and an outlet (all for external installation, see picture A).

The driver receives a 220V-240V input and provides 700mA output (constant current). Each driver can power a maximum of 7 light bodies.

Composition with more than 7 bodies can be realized by combining two or more Azou, each to be installed with its own driver and outlet. The cable between the last light body of the first Azou and the first light body of the second Azou won't be powered, i.e. its function will be purely aesthetic.

The driver can be hidden inside a ventilated place (picture B) or located in any contiguous environment as long as it's not further than 15 meters. Alternatively, we can provide upon request a driver integrated into a custom made metal canopy that can be fixed on the wall.
